Shadyside is in the heart of Pittsburgh’s East End. Walnut Street, Shadyside’s prosperous commercial and entertainment core, offers a bustling atmosphere of boutiques, shops, lounges and restaurants designed to suit the discriminating tastes of residents and visitors. It is surrounded by Squirrel Hill, Oakland, Bloomfield, Friendship, East Liberty, Point Breeze and Larimer. Shadyside was the original name of the Pennsylvania Railroad Station in that area. Made up of both wood and farmland, which was replete with shady lanes at the time of its development in the mid-19th century, the neighborhood has been named appropriately.

Well-maintained, stately Victorian mansions stand in quiet elegance alongside carefully restored homes. Apartment and condominium buildings full of hardwood floors and old-fashioned architectural character, along with newer, modern homes and buildings, are woven together, making a unique and beautiful neighborhood.

Since the 1920’s, a mix of affluent families, young professionals, artists, students and apartment dwellers have settled in Shadyside.
