Greetings from OIE!

Dear Students:

Greetings from Pittsburgh! We are delighted to bring you our Summer edition of the Study Abroad Newsletter. We hope you enjoy this latest issue.

While the summer time is a less hectic time of year for our office, Emily Half and I have been busy working on some interesting projects that we hope will provide better service to students, faculty and staff. Our webpage has also been updated, http://www.cmu.edu/studyabroad and we hope you will take a look at it.

We are also busy preparing for our fall Study Abroad Fair on Thursday, October 8th, from 11am-3pm. Please contact our office if you would like to be involved in this event. Your experience abroad is a wonderful showcase of the opportunities available for prospective study abroad students. As with last year, the Study Abroad Fair will coincide with International Festival.

Many of you worked with Brynn Cunningham, our Graduate Intern, and Sue Jean Ko, our Student Assistant on your preparations for your time abroad. Both students are off for the summer and we wish them well. Brynn is working in California this summer after traveling across the US, vacationing in Costa Rica, and working in Honduras where she participated as a staff member in a short term abroad experience with another university. We look forward to hearing about her travels upon her return.

Sue Jean is busy taking three courses this summer on campus. Unfortunately, we will not be having a Student Assistant next semester, but are overjoyed to have the chance to work with Sue Jean in her new capacity as Multicultural Intern within the Office of the Dean of Student Affairs.

In the newsletter you will find two stories from current students regarding their exciting times abroad. Julia Kang has just completed her experience as a university exchange student at Keio University in Tokyo, Japan. Julia writes about the wonderful calm and peace that can be found within Japanese parks. Rotimi Abimbola, current Student Body President, is interning in Tanzania, and provides a glimpse into the new iSTEP program. Rotimi is interning with a core group of students on a unique project at the University of Dar Es Salaam.

We hope you also enjoy the winning photographs from the Study Abroad Photo Contest! We hope that their stories and photos inspire you to seek educational opportunities accompanied with memorable adventures in new and exciting cultures!

Overall, we hope that the information in this issue is helpful as you prepare to return from studying abroad. We welcome anyone who has stories, photographs or ideas to submit them to goabroad@andrew.cmu.edu.

Warm regards,
Christine Menand
Coordinator of Study Abroad and Exchange programs
More than 200 photos were submitted by returning study abroad students for the 2009 Study Abroad Photo Contest. Featured here are the winners and honorable mentions. All photos will be displayed on the Study Abroad website http://www.cmu.edu/studyabroad.

Julia Kang: Parks in Japan

Parks in the Cities

One of the things that I have noticed during my stay here in Japan is that the Japanese people love parks and gardens. At first it was surprising to see trees and flowers in the middle of a complex of streets and office buildings; but I have come to love strolling through the parks. I cannot agree more how helpful they can be as a place to relax in our busy and stressful life.

It is said that there are around six thousand parks and gardens in Tokyo. Most of them are free of charge, although some gardens have a small entrance fee (which, I think, is worth the money) to go see the beautiful Japanese style gardens.

I have been to many parks, but Ueno Park stands out in my memory as my first park in Japan. Ueno Park is located next to the Ueno station in Tokyo. The first time I came here was during the Hanami season around the beginning of April. The word hanami means looking at flowers, and consequently the hanami season is the perfect time to enjoy the cherry blossoms at local parks. People gather with family and friends under the heavy branches for picnic and parties, while enjoying the beautiful cherry blossoms both in full bloom and falling.

Yesterday when I went to the Ueno Park, there were less people than compared to my first time. Still many people were enjoying a walk down the park and a break from city life. Street performances were being held here and there, as well.

Various temples and shrines can also be found in the parks. Ueno Zoo, Tokyo National Museum, the National Science Museum, and the National Museum of Western Art are also just a short walk within the park, so there are lots to enjoy at Ueno both for the local family and students.

If there is more time left on your hands even after all of these attractions, take a look at the Ameyayokocho Market. This can provide some more insight into the everyday lives of Japanese people, and the livelihood of the bargain markets in Japan.

Ueno may not be as glamorous as some other areas in Tokyo, like Ginza, but it is a definite must-go spot if anyone happens to be in Tokyo.

Rotimi Abimbola: A Tanzanian Internship

I am spending my summer working overseas. I have been in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania for almost 6 weeks conducting needs assessment for three ICTD (Information Communication Technology for Development) projects. The ground work that I am doing has presented me with many new and exciting challenges. Everyday is a learning experience which reassures me that my future career must be centered around a firm commitment to the progress of the African continent, and the lives of its people.

The work that I am doing is part of iSTEP (short for innovative Student Technology ExPerience), an internship program launched this summer by TechBridgeWorld. TechBridgeWorld (http://www.techbridgeworld.org) is a research group at Carnegie Mellon that innovates and implements technology solutions to meet sustainable development needs around the world. Seven interns and I are working in a multidisciplinary globally-distributed team to research community needs and create relevant and accessible technological solutions for three communities in Tanzania.

During this summer's work we are collaborating with our Tanzanian partner, the University Computing Centre (http://www.ucc.co.tz/), based at the University of Dar es Salaam. Together we are working on the following three projects:

1. Developing a mobile phone application to help social workers to provide enhanced services to AIDS orphans and vulnerable children.
2. Developing culturally-relevant educational technology and games for enhancing child literacy.
3. Evaluating and enhancing an Automated Braille Writing Tutor for visually-impaired students.

Our team has just passed the halfway point in our internship experience, and all three projects are well underway. I along with four other team members are working on the ground in Dar es Salaam; two of our team members are working remotely on projects from the Pittsburgh campus; and one member is working remotely from the Doha campus.

In identifying the needs of the three communities, our team has spoken to various community members, including a Tanzanian government official, as well as administrators and teachers from two local primary schools. Having conducted a preliminary needs assessment, we have also embarked on the technical work on each project. Our team continues to learn the ins and outs of research and field work as we work closely with the TechBridgeWorld team to navigate the challenges that arise and to create innovative solutions. We also benefit from the advice of several faculty and staff advisors who have volunteered to help us with these projects.
