

Instructional Triangle

Designing courses requires the alignment of three major components: the learning objectives, the assessments, and the instructional activities. Student learning is enhanced when the instructor and the students have a clear sense of the learning objectives, the instructional activities provide practice and support for the acquisition of learning objectives, and the assessments provide students with opportunities to demonstrate and practice the skills articulated in the objectives.

