Are you interested in the field of Teaching?
If you are interested in becoming a Teacher (Kindergarten through 12th grade), then you will need to have some of the following interests and strengths:

- Wish to help others
- Enjoy sharing your knowledge with others
- Possess knowledge of a specific subject matter for grades 6-12
- Ability to explain difficult topics in an easy-to-learn manner
- Interested in working with children and/or teenagers
- Patience

To teach K-12 in a public school setting in the United States, a Teaching Certificate is required. Each state issues their own certificate and many states have reciprocity with other states. However, some private and religious schools do not require a teaching certificate and if you wish to teach outside of the U.S., those requirements will vary. Depending on the school, they may accept a Bachelor’s degree in a subject and hire you with (or without) the intention of your working toward certification.

Getting a Teacher Certification
In the U.S. there are different age-level certifications:

- Early Education
- Elementary School
- Middle School
- High School
- Additional certifications: reading specialist, special education, library specialist, counselor

In order to teach, you will need to fulfill certification and licensing requirements. These vary by state, but generally include:

- Obtain a Bachelor’s degree at CMU
- Complete a teacher preparation program, which includes either a Master’s (Master of Arts in Teaching-MAT) or Post-Baccalaureate (professional-year PY) university program
- Complete a semester of student teaching (part of the MAT or PY program)
- Complete all requirements for a state or national certification

Additional requirements before you can teach:
Most schools require you to pass background checks and tests, such as:

- Act 33/34
- Criminal Record
- Fingerprinting
- PRAXIS Tests (this varies by state and in Pennsylvania there are also Pre-Service Academic Performance Tests)
