

“Afro-Cuban Women: between Democracy and Revolution (1902-1952)”

Manuel Ramírez Chicharro, Ph.D.

Dr. Manuel Ramírez Chicharro is a visiting scholar in the University Research Institute for Latin American Studies at the University of Alcalá and a member of the Comparative Studies Group of the Caribbean and the Atlantic World at the Spanish National Research Council. His research focuses on the status of Afro-Cuban women during the Cuban Republic, how they challenged a non-inclusive democracy, and how they shaped more radical state-building projects in Cuba. Chicharro researches how Black, mulatto, and white women actively advanced the suffrage movement, but also how white feminists did not include Afro-Cuban women in national processes by not considering their struggle against both gender and racial discrimination. He argues that Afro-Cuban women had to struggle for recognition not just against a racist and male-dominated political environment, but also against their middle-class, white feminist colleagues.

Ramírez Chicharro is the author of two award-winning books published in 2019: Más allá del sufragismo. Las mujeres cubanas en la democratización de Cuba (1933-1952) [Beyond Suffrage: Cuban Women and Democracy in Cuba (1933-1952)] and Llamada a las armas. Las mujeres en la revolución cubana (1952-1959) [A Call to Arms: Women in the Cuban Revolution (1952-1959)].
