

Sam Reiman

Sam Reiman is director of the $3 billion Richard King Mellon Foundation, Southwestern Pennsylvania's largest philanthropy and one of the 50 largest in the world. Reiman was named director of the Foundation in January 2019 and was elected to its Board of Trustees in June 2020. He leads the Foundation's long-term strategic planning and its annual grantmaking program of more than $130 million. Reiman joined the foundation in January 2015 as associate director.

Reiman began his college education at the Lancaster, PA campus of Harrisburg Area Community College in 1997 prior to transferring to Franklin and Marshall College. Reiman holds a BA degree in Science, Technology and Public Policy from Franklin and Marshall College, Cum Laude; an MS degree in Public Policy and Management with a Minor in Business Administration from Carnegie Mellon University; and an MS degree in Biotechnology from The Johns Hopkins University. He resides in Pittsburgh with his wife, Sandra, and two daughters, Isabella, and Sofia.