Effective July 1, 2021:

Human subjects researchers must advise all study participants and those who accompany them of their relevant obligations under the university minimum requirements. In order to facilitate compliance with the minimum requirements, researchers should follow the guidance in the revised COVID-19 Screening Process and Questions. This screening process replaces previous guidance/requirements and screening questions.

Researchers are advised that they are not permitted to ask and/or document a participant's vaccination status nor are they permitted to require participants to be vaccinated unless such activities and requirements are part of an approved IRB protocol.

All persons coming on site to participate in human subjects research are considered to be approved visitors by the Vice President for Research. No additional approvals are necessary unless required by a facility-specific policy.
