Sustainable Earth

Sustainable Earth aims to encourage Carnegie Mellon University and the Pittsburgh Community to actively practice ways of living sustainably. We also aim to network with other organizations, on and off-campus, who are interested in strengthening environmental initiatives in Pittsburgh. We organize participatory community events and volunteer activities open to all, such as: trips to local sites of interest to learn or volunteer; work days in the community garden we maintain; a campaign to reduce the use of bottled water (and other plastic waste) on campus; a campaign to promote and introduce more local, sustainable, organic food options on campus; a campaign for alternative energy systems on campus; a campaign to divest from Fossil Fuel: our sustainable design and build group's projects; trips to national conferences and competitions; and other activities that educate the campus and Pittsburgh Community.

Women in Politics

Women in Politics at CMU is dedicated to inspiring the next generation of world leaders through collective action and civic engagement, connecting the on-campus community with the greater Pittsburgh area and the world beyond. Our organization educates our peers by demonstrating the power of political participation, and strives to encourage women and minority students to recognize politics as an effective means of personal empowerment. By advocating for greater diversity in public service, we strive to elect a government that affords equal representation to the population it serves, and guarantees that no voice is left unheard.
