Process Books for Assessing How Students Think About Design - School of Design

Process books are used by all students in studio-based courses that have projects. Students use these books to record their thinking and their process throughout all phases of the project. Some things that are recorded in the books include:

• The framework of the assignment,

• The ways in which students came to choose a particular design,

• The ways in which they worked through the various design problems, and

• An evaluation of how the final product did or did not do what it was supposed to do.
